Information about your Synacthen Test

Your consultant has referred you for this test to measure how well your body can produce cortisol. Cortisol is one of the essential steroid hormones which help to keep you healthy. You may be unwell if levels of this hormone are too high or too low.

This test is performed in the morning and you will be required to rest throughout. You are allowed to eat and drink as normal. The test will take approximately one to two hours.

If you are taking oestrogen therapy (such as HRT or the oral contraceptive) these need to be discontinued six weeks prior to your test. If this is not possible please contact MES to discuss with a nurse.

If you are taking oral steroids please omit the night before and morning of your test.

If you are taking inhaled steroids please omit on the morning of your test.

If there is any chance you may be pregnant please inform your consultant prior to your appointment date.

When you arrive onto the Medical Elective Services (MES) you will be asked to rest for 30 minutes. A cannula will then be inserted into a vein in your arm. Two blood samples will be taken from this for baseline readings of your hormone levels. Next you will be given the Synacthen through your cannula. A further two blood samples will be taken at 30 minute intervals. The test is then complete and your cannula will be removed.

Side effects of Synacthen are uncommon. However, if you experience any nausea, dizziness, stomach pain, flushing or difficulty breathing please inform a member of staff.

Your doctor will tell you the results of this test at a later date.
