

Information for patients, relatives and carers

A child has swallowed a foreign object – Follow up not required

What are the aims of this information?

This leaflet is intended to advise you of the procedure for managing a child who has swallowed something (a foreign object).

Most swallowed objects pass through the digestive system without any problems once they have reached the stomach. Metal coins are the most common and often harmless type of objects swallowed by children.

Batteries, especially button or disc batteries, magnets and items containing lead have the potential for more serious complications. It is important to tell the doctor if these types of items have been swallowed as they are termed 'hazardous'.

Your visit to our Emergency Department (A&E)

Today the child will have been assessed with a metal detector alone or in conjunction with an X-ray as determined by local guidelines for foreign object ingestion.

We are satisfied the object has safely passed into the stomach or further in the digestive tract and it is likely to be passed through their system and be seen in their stool (poo) within a few days.

Today your child has been discharged after swallowing a foreign object

The foreign object may not have passed through them yet, but it is ok to take your child home.

Please monitor your child and watch them closely. You must bring your child back immediately to the emergency department if they are experiencing any of the following symptoms:

- Vomiting
- Abdominal pain
- Blood in vomit or poo
- Have a fever
- Refusing to eat or drink
- You think they may have swallowed further foreign objects

Who should I contact if I have a problem or question?

- NHS direct on 111 (www.nhsdirect.nhs.uk)
- Try to arrange appointment with your GP
- Attend Emergency Department (A&E)

In an emergency requiring urgent attention:
